This Week—

By M. I. N. I.

Now that we have awakened from the nightmare of furlough and discharge, let's go! We must forget the politicians who had us by the throat and remember only the staunch way in which the people stood by National Defense. We owe the people everything. Discharge the debt by regained morale and increased efficiency.

General MacArthur is receiving the grateful thanks of the rank and file of the Army, the Navy and the Marine Corps for the effective manner in which he safeguarded National Defense. "Not an officer or a man" was his slogan and the country, inspired by his attitude, echoed it as its own. The Commander of the Rainbow Division is as able a leader in peace as he was in war.

To Secretary Dern we extend especially our appreciative thanks. Here is an example of a big, broad citizen entering the War Department inclined to pacifism, but with an open mind. His painstaking investigation convinced him that the Army strength should not be curtailed, and that his responsibility to the country required him to insist upon its maintenance. He did so. The Nation can trust Mr. Dern's judgment.

On the other hand, we have Secretary Swanson, who, in the Senate, was known as an ardent advocate of the Navy. We find him responding to political direction, ordering the laying up of one-third of the navy and favoring the furlough, then the retirement, of officers and the discharge of enlisted men. Now, as a result of public opinion, he has abandoned these plans. Follow your own convictions, Mr. Secretary. That will be the best thing for the country.

President Roosevelt, in his address to the Naval Academy graduates, interpolated that of all the branches of the government he loved the Navy most. When the mother whipped the child she told him the spanking hurt her more than it did him. "Yes, mother," was the reply, "but don't love me so hard!"

The President again has postponed his announcement of the plan to reorganize the executive departments of the government. Here is a breathing spell for the Services which have been threatened by the transfer of some of their branches to civilian control. I hope the Engineer Corps will be left where it is, and with the duties it at present performs, and not turned over to the Interior Department. That would be a mistake in organization, injurious to National Defense, and the opening of the door to graft from which river and harbor work has been constantly free. Congress should and will oppose any such move.

Director of the Budget Douglas is slated to succeed Mr. Woodin as Secretary. (Please turn to Page 801)

Plan to Shift Officers to Other Departments

An executive order authorizing the transfer of officers of the Army and Navy to other branches of the government, their pay to come from the budgets of the branches to which they are transferred, has been signed by the President.

Under this authority it is contemplated that some 300 officers of the Navy and Marine Corps will be transferred to duty with the War Department for assignment to Civilian Conservation Corps duty, and later probably 500 others will be given work on the Muscle Shoals and other new government work projects.

Although at the present time the Army has insufficient regular officers to take care of the C.C.C. and is therefore able to utilize reserve officers and naval officers the executive order was made applicable to the Army so that when the C.C.C. is disbanded officers of the military branch can be utilized by other governmental agencies.

Actual issuance of the executive order which was signed May 27 by President Roosevelt has been held up until an agreement can be reached between the War and Navy Departments as to the number of Naval officers to be taken over by the Army. The Navy Department already has selected approximately 300 officers for transfer.

Plans are now under way looking to the transfer of additional naval officers to other departments. Approximately 800 in all will be so assigned, it is said.

The plan is viewed as laden with dire potentialities. Under it, it would be possible to destroy the efficiency of any of the National Defense forces through depriving it of necessary personnel. Officers transferred to civilian agencies would in time suffer a loss in their professional efficiency.

Some see in the inclusion of the Army in the order, a movement, perhaps, to transfer the personnel of entire corps, such as the engineers, to other governmental agencies not concerned in the mission of National Defense.

USNA Class Graduates

President Roosevelt on June 1 presented to 244 members of the graduating class of the Naval Academy commissions in the naval service and wished them well in their future career.

For the first time, the graduates, 432 in number, were awarded the degree of bachelor of science. Of this number 216 were commissioned in the Line of the Navy, 20 went into the Marine Corps, eight were commissioned as ensigns in the Supply Corps, while six will be held at the Naval Academy as midshipmen until July 1, when vacancies will be available to them in the Supply Corps.

President Roosevelt in his address to the class said:

I am not going to talk to you of the many heroic examples that have been set by those who in past years have received their commissions on occasions such as this. I am not going to give you a lecture on the uniqueness of your position as the first line of the nation's

Service Pensions

The new veterans pension regulations if rigidly applied, will do a great injustice to many regular service widows, a considerable number of whom are over 70 years of age. Many of these women are the widows of regular officers and soldiers who suffered the vicissitudes of foreign service and other hardships in following their husbands throughout their Army careers. There was little chance for such families to save money and in many cases where savings were made and carefully invested, all has been lost during the past three or four years.

For some years past such widows were entitled to pensions of $30.00 per month on account of their husbands' services during the Spanish War, Philippine Insurrection or Boxer Rebellion and in most cases service was had in at least two of the aforementioned emergencies. Where the husband bought life insurance or made investments which have stood the depression, these widows are to receive no pension if their private incomes are over $1,000 per year and if their incomes are under $1,000 per year the pension is to be cut to $15.00 per month. One thousand dollars per year is not sufficient income for an elderly woman to support herself adequately in any city and besides, it may be questioned why the Federal Government should penalize those people who by careful living have been able to build up some estate.

It has been difficult to get an exact general statement which would show the effect of the new pension laws and regulations which are to become effective July 1, 1933. Several brief statements (Please turn to Page 806)

The Marine Corps

As the only reason for the existence of a military force is defense of the nation in time of war, the necessity for maintenance of a particular service of the defense establishment must be judged by its dispensability or indispensability when the bullets begin to fly.

Therefore, in the study now being made by the Roosevelt Board as to the possibilities of amalgamating the Marine Corps and Navy Staff Corps with the Line, consideration may well be given to whether the Marines can be replaced in their chief war function.

When the Fleet must advance beyond the circles of operation limited by the permanent bases, for the purpose of seeking out the enemy fleet, or of operating against his ports and bases, it must establish new bases for itself which will serve as centers of other circle areas of operation, from which it can draw its sustenance and to which it can withdraw in case of stress of weather and damage from contact with the enemy or from other causes. Obviously, if the harbors most advantageous for this advance base service are selected within enemy territory, these bases must be captured and held.

After capture these advance bases, whether in friendly or enemy territory, must be defended against any land forces of the enemy which may be brought against them, and also against

Army Personnel Saved; Senate Kills Furlough

Victory in the fight to retain the personnel strength of the Army apparently was attained on two fronts this week.

First, the Senate without debate or roll call rejected the half-pay furlough amendment to the Independent Office Bill, which was sponsored by the Director of the Budget and approved by the President.

Second, General Douglas MacArthur, chief of staff, after a five hour conference with Director of the Budget Douglas, sent the following radio message to all Corps Area and Department Commanders: "There will be no cut in the strength of the Army either in officers or enlisted men. Inform all ranks."

Action in each case took place late Tuesday afternoon, Memorial Day.

The Senate dispensed with the half-pay furlough clause speedily. Senator Byrnes, of South Carolina, who was handling the bill on the floor for the Appropriations Committee, previously had made a number of committee amendments. When the furlough provision was reached the following took place:

The Presiding Officer: The Senator from South Carolina offers an amendment, which the clerk will report.

The Legislative Clerk: On page 58, it is proposed to strike out section 3, as follows:

Sec. 3. The President is authorized to place on furlough such officers of the Army, Marine Corps, Public Health Service, Coast Guard, or Coast and Geodetic Survey, as he, in his discretion, shall deem desirable. While on furlough, officers shall receive one half the pay to which they would otherwise have been entitled, but shall not be entitled to any allowance except for travel to their homes.

Senator Byrnes: Mr. President, I will say that this section relates to furloughs of officers which was discussed in the committee, and by agreement I was to ascertain the situation. After investigation I offer this amendment, which I send to the desk.

Senator McCarran: Mr. President, are the amendments the Senator is offering the ones which were adopted by the committee?

Senator Byrnes: All except the last one as to which, as I stated, I was to make an investigation. I think the Senator was one who advised that such an investigation be made, and as the result of that investigation I have offered the amendment.

The Presiding Officer: The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from South Carolina.

The amendment was agreed to. Regarding the Budget Director's conference with the Chief of Staff strict secrecy was observed on both sides, but the General's radiogram to the Corps Area commanders was taken as significant of the result.

Secretary of War Dern, who has held staunchly for the personnel strength of the service, indicated at his press conference on Thursday that a final decision on the entire Army budget problem may be expected within a few days. Ques-

Maintenance of Army and Navy at Present Level Insisted On by Public

Maintenance of the Army and Navy at the present level is demanded of those in control of the Government by the public, through the editorial columns of leading newspapers and petitions of civic organizations. Since the possibility of further curtailment of the already reduced armed forces became known, public opinion has made itself felt in opposition to the movement.

"It is unthinkable that the Roosevelt administration would seriously consider eliminating 3,000 officers and discharging 13,000 enlisted men from what is left of the regular army upon the pretense that this would be economy," states the Omaha Bee.

"Instead of economy, any such reduction of strength would be the most reckless national extravagance.

"Any secretary of war who would recommend a further reduction in our combat forces in view of their present depleted strength, would be out of place in the Cabinet of a President rejoicing in the illustrious name of Roosevelt."

"What is to be gained by furloughing thousands of officers of the Army, Navy and Marine Corps on half pay, when thousands of officers in the organized reserves are being called to the colors for service with the newly organized Civilian Conservation Corps?" asks the New York American.

"Why compel the War Department to discharge thousands of enlisted men from the Army, who are drawing a paltry $17.85 a month, when another executive department is enlisting two hundred and fifty thousand young men of military age at $30 a month for service in the newly organized Civilian Conservation Corps?"

"A Director of the Budget who is increasing unemployment with one hand while adding to it with another is not reducing Federal expenditures or national unemployment. He is only jeopardizing our national security for no good reason."

The Milwaukee Journal comments:

"America has long had it on the books to build the Navy up to the strength of the Washington and London treaties. We fought for that privilege for eight years and we assumed treaty obligations which presupposed that we would take advantage of it, once we had won it.

tioned as to the budget conferences he said, "I am not at liberty to say anything today. I think it was in a quiet state until the last day or two but is being discussed again now. There will probably be some agreement reached in the near future."

Asked specifically as to the possibility of reducing personnel the Secretary replied: "Well, of course, that's part of the whole general problem. I don't think I am in accord with that, except that I might say that it would be absolutely impossible to reduce the number because we are not only using all available officers for the Civilian Conservation Work, but have called in about 1,400 reserve officers in addition for that work. You must realize we are virtually mobilizing an army and have got to use every officer we have."

The Secretary also was questioned as to whether or not he or the Department officially had communicated opinions to Senator Byrnes regarding the Army's views on the proposed half-pay furlough for officers. Mr. Dern said that he had not, that his first knowledge of Senator Byrnes' attitude came when he read in the Congressional Record of the Senate's action.

"Everybody knows," Mr. Dern said, "that the Army in general doesn't like the idea, but the Department as such hasn't been consulted on it."

The next hurdle for the half-pay provision will come in the conference between the House and Senate, inasmuch as the House will carry the provision which the Senate struck out. There is every reason to believe that the conferees will eliminate the provision in the final draft of the measure. Senator David A. Reed, ranking republican on the Senate military affairs committee, who with Senator Sheppard, chairman of the committee, recently talked with President Roosevelt regarding the proposal, told the ARMY AND NAVY JOURNAL this week that the President indicated to them that he is willing to drop the provision.

"I have no doubt," Senator Reed said, "that the House will accept the Senate's action. The President has indicated that he is entirely willing to drop the amendment. I do not think there will be any trouble in the conference."

Without the legislative authority which would have been given him in the furlough provision, the President will not have the legal right to remove officers of the Army from the active list except under the regular retirement and class B laws.

C.C.C. Developments

With the majority of our National Forest in the Rocky Mountains and the Pacific Coast ranges, the center of mass of the approved camp sites or work projects is in Nevada while the center of mass of the Civilian Conservation Corps men is in Ohio. The War Department is thus faced with the immense task of transporting large numbers of men and supplies great distances in order to have the 274,375 members of the Civilian Conservation Corps in 1300 Work Camps by July 1st. This vast movement was initiated last week when the Third Corps Area dispatched the administrative cadres of 32 companies to Utah and Idaho. One train left Ft. Monroe, Va., for Salt Lake City and one train left Ft. George G. Meade, Md. for Pocatello, Idaho. Each train carried 16 Regular Army officers, 64 enlisted men and 336 members of the Civilian Conservation Corps. Each cadre of 1 officer, 4 enlisted men, and 21 members of the Civilian Conservation Corps will establish a camp pending the shipment of the other officers and members for each camp from the Third Corps Area.

The President having authorized the enrollment of 25,000 veterans for this project, the majority of the Bonus Marchers at Ft. Hunt, Va., (22,000), have enrolled for the Civilian Conservation Corps and were sent to posts in Virginia and Maryland, for organization and conditioning prior to being sent to work camps. Other veterans up to the authorized number will be enrolled in their home localities.

Personnel

By Wednesday, May 17 there were 62,500 men enrolled and certified to the Army, of this number 50,000 were in conditioning camps and 12,500 were in 105 work camps. By midnight May 22, there were 110,700 enrolled, 86,350 in conditioning camps and 24,350 in 203 work camps. A gain for the six days since May 16th of 48,325 men and 98 camps. The daily rate, exclusive of Sunday, was 9,647 which is well above the required rate of 8,500 necessary to complete the President's directive.

During last week many officers on duty with the Organized Reserves, National Guard, and Reserve Officers' Training Corps were placed on duty with the Civilian Conservation Corps.

On May 24th, 3,000 officers including Naval Surgeons and Reserve Officers, were engaged exclusively on Civilian Conservation Corps work.

The following numbers of Reserve Officers were on active duty with the Civilian Conservation Corps: 106 Medical 4 Chaplains 885 Line and Staff other than Medical & Chaplains 1085 Total.

"For one reason or another, we have never got around to the undertaking. Peace conferences have been almost continually in the offing and we have feared others would charge us with bad faith. Lately the deterrent has been economy. * * *

"Now an opportunity offers itself. It seems to be a settled policy that we shall undertake considerable public construction as a relief program. Then why not build up the fleet? That is a good deal better than constructing some of the unneeded postoffices which have been proposed. * * *

"This would not be to violate our stand for naval limitation. It would be to back up that stand. The very essence of the Washington and London treaties is that naval peace shall be promoted by maintaining a fixed ratio which would stabilize naval strength and police the ocean. We said that was what we wanted. Now let's do our share to make it successful."

"Nearly every economy plan that has been suggested for either the Army or Navy involves the dismissal of large groups of men," declares the Washington Post. "This question ought to be considered from two different angles. The personnel of both the Army and Navy is below the minimum requirements for an effective machine of national defense. Furthermore, the Government is fighting a battle against unemployment. A vast program of public works is about to be submitted to Congress to afford relief to the jobless. What is the advantage of destroying jobs that are of vital importance to the country's welfare and creating more jobs for the mere purpose of affording work?"

The New York Society Standing Committee of the Military and Naval Officers of the World War has adopted a resolution declaring "That New York Society Military and Naval Officers World War, while supporting loyally the program of the President, reiterates its firm stand in favor of the preservation of adequate national defense as provided in the National Defense Act as amended in 1920, believing that national defense is highly important as an insurance measure and therefore a real economy; and be it further resolved, That this society urges upon the President and Congress to take whatever measures are necessary to continue such appropriations as will fully insure our national defense without reduction of personnel or training."

Ft. Shafter, T. H.—The retirement of Master Sergeant William G. Beaver, Service Battery, 64th Coast Artillery (AA), on the completion of 30 years honorable service has been announced to the Regiment.

Master Sergeant Beaver began his Army career on March 3, 1905, as a private in the 16th Infantry and, with the exception of one enlistment in the Infantry and one with the General Service Infantry, his entire service has been with the Coast Artillery Corps. While serving in the 16th Infantry he served over two years in the Philippine Islands. For over 23 years he has been a non-commissioned officer. This service comprises nine enlistments, which were successively terminated by an unbroken series of "excellent" discharges.

During the World War, Master Sergeant Beaver served with Battery F, 73rd Artillery, in the Verdun Sector.

Personalities and Personal Relationships in the American Expeditionary Forces

by MAJ. GEN. JAMES G. HARBORD
USA-Ret.

(Concluded from last week)

In the group of officers who accompanied General Pershing to France were two outstanding personalities destined to very directly influence the men and morale of the American Expeditionary Forces. These were Col. Andre W. Brewster, the Inspector General, and Col. Merritte W. Ireland of the Medical Corps. The former had won a medal of honor during the Boxer Campaign by jumping into the tawny tide of the Peiho under fire and rescuing a wounded soldier of his company from drowning. He had been a far traveler in foreign lands and knew our Allies well. His soldierly character made him a great influence for discipline and deportment. He early became a Major General and like the knightly gentleman that he is cheerfully endured his disappointment in not having a command. Colonel Ireland was General Pershing's choice for Chief Surgeon, but Colonel Bradley, senior to him, was already in Europe and designated for the duty. The latter, a very able officer, was not in robust health, and when he fell before the medical examination in early 1918, Ireland became Chief Surgeon AEF. He quickly achieved the reputation that made him the conspicuously successful Chief of his Corps for a longer period than any of his predecessors. Both of these officers are Major Generals on the retired list.

When we sailed for Europe on May 28, 1917, General Pershing found on the Baltic a friend from his Russian Japanese War days, the eminent war correspondent Frederick Palmer, whom he had known on the Manchurian Front. Palmer, an interpreter of wars from his youth, sought the colors in the summer of 1917, and became a Major serving with the Press and Intelligence Section. In the dark days of the following winter he returned, for some months, to America, and, not only personally told the story of the AEF from the lecture platform, but his book, "America at War," was a powerful influence on public opinion at home. As an author his writings will constitute important material for other and later historians.

Though he was never strictly a part of the American Expeditionary Forces, his duties in Europe may be said to have been tangent to it, and Gen. Tasker H. Bliss was a personality of tremendous potentiality. Chief of Staff for a brief three months, which terminated with his statutory retirement for age, Dec. 31, 1917, he was the American member of the Supreme War Council at Versailles. He was without doubt the most highly educated member of our Army in his generation. He knew Latin and Greek as he knew English. He had a workable command of French, Spanish, German and Italian. He was an authority on oriental botany. He was widely read in the military history of the world, and a student of all branches of the military profession. He came to France with the entire confidence of the President and Secretary of War, whose confidential staff officer he had been. He was an older man than General Pershing. He undoubtedly had opinions of his own on events as they were happening. He was a member of a Council which had infinite capacity for harm and, in my opinion, little utility for good. He could, with the best of intentions, have involved General Pershing in every kind of difficulty. But he "played the game" in every particular, supporting the Commander-in-Chief and demonstrated lofty patriotism, as well as professional and personal wisdom. The President leaned on him heavily during the Peace Conference, of which he was a member. With no test of his ability as a high commander of troops, no American need hesitate to agree that he was a great military statesman.

Any address which purports to deal with personalities and personal relations in the AEF must, of course, be fragmentary and incomplete. Ours was perhaps the most individualistic Army that ever went to war. There were over two million personalities in the American Expeditionary Forces, some thousands of them no doubt strong and outstanding. Personality is largely the impression which one person makes and leaves upon another. My opportunities for meeting and observing the other members of that great organization were perhaps better than those of any one else except the great Commander-in-Chief himself. But, after all, mine were largely the fleeting contacts which registered an impression of the moment. The apprehension I feel in trying to make this address measure up to such a title as I have given it is not that I shall include personalities that do not belong in such a category, but that some real personalities have been omitted out of regard for those who have had to listen to an address now already too long.

Time flew over our heads in those busy days of 1917 and '18. There was little and in some cases no time to secure discipline, esprit de corps and cohesion, not to mention instruction by the time-honored methods. What was accomplished was largely due to the adaptability of Americans and their comprehension that what we call discipline must be maintained if their mission was to be accomplished in such fashion as to permit them to return to their homes in the shortest possible time. That was what they all desired. When the Armistice was signed, which to their minds signified the end of the war, there was a great pressure brought to send "the boys" home at once. They all wished it. Most of them thought it a fine idea to come by way of Paris, and the thinking ones who realized that the entire AEF could not take transports for home on Nov. 12 or 13, eagerly hoped that the necessary delay might be passed in that attractive city.

General Pershing, who realized how much of their discipline was self-imposed and how incomplete was the training of some of the later arrivals, knew that the Armistice, though everyone hoped that it had ended the war, was actually merely an agreed cessation of hostilities for a month. Our troops were still under command of the Allied Commander-in-Chief. The forces of the Allies had still to be kept intact for many months. The effect of idleness on a command in such circumstances is very deleterious to health and discipline. The great majority of the soldiers of the American Expeditionary Forces were men whose age justified the belief that if trained properly they would be a military asset to our country for 15 or 20 years to come, if their services should again be needed. General Pershing therefore instituted a rigid program of instruction and carried it out. His great personality was never better demonstrated than in the unswerving firmness with which he enforced this program. Coincident with it was the fact, which our country has never appreciated, that he sent the armies home free from venereal infection. No army in history has had such a record in this particular. Generations yet unborn, and our whole national life to come, will owe a debt of gratitude to him which cannot be overstated in history.

The immediate effect of these things on the American Expeditionary Forces, however, was a great unpopularity for the Commander-in-Chief. They looked for someone on which to put the responsibility for the delays and the precautions. The censor had done its work well, and they knew no one on whom to blame them, except General Pershing. As the credit for what was done was his, he had with it to bear the onus of unpopularity. The first men to be returned to the United States were, naturally, casualties. They came back as individuals or as members of temporary organizations without discipline or esprit de corps, some of them sick and disabled, full of soldier ideas about the discomforts of the ports of embarkation. To be met by reporters eager for news of the returning armies was a strange and new sensation to most of them. They were free from restraints that had bound them for many months, and they used the new found freedom. Time, however, has brought the realization to those now middle aged men, that what is their greatest pride and fame is inseparably bound up with their great leader. Individual claims and stories of war experiences that do not diminish with the passing of the years must for their authenticity depend upon the fact that they were well commanded on the Western Front, and that the man who did it was John J. Pershing.

The Commander-in-Chief throughout the World War bore himself always in the most distinguished way. His life, since his return has been devoted to two great accomplishments, the National Defense plan and the proper marking of the battlefields forever immortalized by the success of the American arms. He long since became a great national figure, standing out above the lesser men of our times. He has never forfeited the confidence of his countrymen by any misstep in speech or action; by any error or judgment, or conduct, or in any other way. Since Washington no other of our national heroes has completed the natural span of life with such an unbroken continuity of respect, esteem and affection from the American people.

General Pershing's Address

A stirring exposition of the National Defense set-up and the need for maintaining it was made by General John J. Pershing, USA-Ret, in a Memorial Day address, delivered over the National Broadcasting System.

The text of General Pershing's address follows:

On this Memorial Day, it again becomes our sacred duty as a patriotic people to pause and in reverence pay homage to those who gave their all that the nation might live. Whether they rest in the family church yard or in beautiful Arlington or on the fields of glory where they fell, we remember with solemn pride the sacrifice they made in defense of their country.

As we honor our soldier dead, our thoughts turn instinctively to those women and children whose martyrdom is as lasting as theirs was cruel. The bitterness and the loneliness of their bereavement awaken in our hearts the most tender feelings of sympathy.

But those who arouse our deepest emotions are our comrades who still carry the wounds of battle or suffer from disabilities due to exposure and hardship. Their heroism moves us to sentiments of profound gratitude and imposes upon the nation obligations concerning their welfare which cannot be evaded. These unfortunate men must remain our constant concern. As this is written we have assurance from responsible officials of the government that veterans whose disability was incident to the service will be shown every consideration. There should be no deviation from this just principle. The nation's debt to worthy veterans is imperative, and the American people will resent any neglect of these valiant men.

The economic situation which confronts the nation becomes the concern of every American citizen. There rests upon every one of us an obligation of loyalty to the government which must be met courageously. It is a pleasure to remember that among the first to recognize this obligation were the veterans of the World War, who spoke through their leaders and in no uncertain terms committed themselves to the support of the President.

Loyal to the conception of free institutions handed down to us by the fathers, the present generation will not fail to do its part to support their teachings. Among the basic principles set forth in the Preamble to the Constitution there is one which deserves special notice at this time. It is that which enjoins us to provide for the national defense. In view of world conditions, this question is more important today than at any time since the World War. There can be no theoretical substitute for an adequate system of national defense.

People have cherished the hope that the broadening facilities for inter-communication between peoples, the extensive exchange of friendly visits, the interdependence of nations in finance and commerce, would lead to better understanding and greater cooperation. But all too plainly the probability of the fulfillment of this hope seems to be receding farther and farther away.

Although wars had flared in the Balkans, prior to the world conflict the leading nations of Europe had been at peace for nearly fifty years. Then suddenly, almost out of a clear sky, the devastating conflagration burst forth in such fury that the entire structure of modern civilization seemed about to fall. In seeking an explanation, we find that many nations still hold the fallacious doctrine that war is an essential element of their national policy. This, coupled with that other false theory that nations may become great through wars of aggression against their neighbors, stands definitely in the way of permanent peace. The casual observer sees that, notwithstanding treaties to promote peace, wars continue to be waged in various parts of the globe. He sees that when treaties clash with national ambitions aggressive nations do not hesitate to disregard their treaty obligations. It is, therefore, a question of moral standards among peoples. Under these conditions, can there be any immediate hope that nations are ready to beat their swords into ploughshares? The world is definitely in that state of mind when something more than plausible assurances are necessary to convince us that certain peoples have forsaken their lawless tendencies.

Yet some of our people are led to believe that if America would take the lead in disarmament other nations would follow. Let us no longer deceive ourselves by such futile experiments. There is plenty of evidence with which to refute such childlike faith. The advocacy of such a course tends to create "slackers"—by which I mean men who are willing to accept the protection of the government but unwilling to fight for its preservation. The absurdity of the theory that our example would lead other nations to disarm was fully proved before the World War. The fact is that this country was known to be practically disarmed, but no other nation followed our example. During the World War one nation, believing that we would not or could not fight, took advantage of our unprepared condition to force us into war.

Regarding the general subject of disarmament now under international discussion, it is clear that until there is something definite upon which to base some degree of hope for such a happy consummation, America cannot afford to relax her vigilance. In the World War we were not compelled to engage our fully prepared adversary single-handed, but we are not likely to be so fortunate another time. This suggests the conclusion that our success should not lead us to the false notion that patriotic fervor alone will prove a substitute for thorough military training.

The beginning of the World War in Europe found us absorbed in the pursuits of peace, quite unconscious of any probable threat to our security. We remained unprepared for war even though warned by some of our statesmen that "If war comes with Germany it will be because of our unpreparedness and her belief that we are more or less impotent to do her harm." Even when it was clear that war was inevitable, we made little more than a gesture to get ready for eventualities. Practically nothing was done in the way of increasing our military strength or of providing equipment. The navy was in somewhat better shape, but its vital importance today as an arm of national defense should prompt the country to keep it up to full treaty strength and in the highest state of efficiency.

In 1917, our small regular army and an imperfectly organized and trained national guard constituted our entire land force. There was no provision for expansion, no trained men in reserve, and no plan for organization and training. We were lacking in artillery, in aviation, and in all other equipment for the millions of men subsequently required. The General Staff was not yet properly organized. The nation had no plan to meet the problems, and we were placed in a most serious dilemma. After a waste of six months' time, men were herded together in expensively constructed cantonments, where their training was conducted with the greatest difficulty. Their progress was delayed by extensive transfers of men from camp to camp and by a desultory training program that was not thoroughly coordinated with the requirements of service in France.

Thus we were called upon at tremendous expense to make up in a few months for the neglect of years during which self-satisfied provincialism and smug complacency had prevented the most elementary efforts toward a reasonable precaution to meet such an emergency. We were unable to put our larger units into battle for a year after war was declared. If, on the other hand, in 1917 we had provided a small professional army as a nucleus, plus a reservoir of trained civilian man-power totaling 500,000 men, fully equipped and organized, the probabilities are that we would not have been drawn into the war at all. If, however, we had been drawn in, the war without doubt would have been won that year, with the consequent saving of hundreds of thousands of human lives and billions of dollars in money and property.

In order not again to be caught unprepared, it became necessary after the World War to consider the reorganization of our army on an efficient peacetime basis. Full consideration was given to the lessons of two previous years of war. Mr. Newton D. Baker, the Secretary of War, gave the subject most careful thought, fully realizing that an army ready for battle cannot be extemporized, although misleading theories to that effect are now being advanced by inexperienced persons. In a strong appeal to Congress, Mr. Baker recommended that the permanent strength of the regular army should be 18,000 officers and 280,000 men. After exhaustive hearings, Congress passed what is known as the "National Defense Act." This Act provided for a regular army, national guard, and reserve,—the regular army to consist of only 14,000 officers and 165,000 men as the minimum consistent with reasonable safety. This is relatively a very small force as compared with other nations. The national guard of today would require a great deal of training before it could take the field.

In addition to these forces we have the highly important Reserve Officers' Training Corps and the Citizens' Military Training Camps. The former is made up of those splendid units of fine young college students, from which we now obtain our reserve officers. The latter provide excellent schools of citizenship, patriotism, and physical training for some 35,000 of our youth annually. It is often claimed that this training creates a desire for war. I deny this most emphatically. If anything, it has the contrary effect.

But the force provided in the National Defense Act has been materially diminished. Since the Act was passed the regular army has been reduced from time to time so that we now have only 12,000 officers and 118,000 men for all purposes, including service at home and in the insular possessions, the latter requiring 38,000 officers and men. The difference between Secretary Baker's idea of a national force and the strength of the Army today is striking. His action was based upon his own experience, supported by the advice and counsel of army men who had served through the war. But now, once more, even in the face of these continuous reductions in strength the army has suffered, there is talk of still further mutilation of this diminutive force. It is my firm opinion that no further reduction can safely be made and that it should not be attempted. We have reached the minimum limit unless we abandon altogether the carefully considered conclusions of men who know the difficulties of building up an entirely new army after war has come upon us.

The charge is often made that men who advocate preparedness are militarists. There is no such thing in this country. No one wants war, least of all the trained soldier. Moreover, the army does not declare or advocate war. It is Congress, composed of the people's representatives, which declares war.

The Army has always been most useful in times of peace, but the extent of its peace-time services is scarcely known to our people. In an earlier day the army protected settlers and opened up the great west. It has met and continues to meet emergencies that arise in different parts of the country. It serves the people in times of flood, fire, earthquake, and drought. It was the army that made possible the Panama Canal. It is our great national police force that stands ready to maintain peaceful internal conditions throughout the country.

Disregarding the possibility of war, the army is a national asset and a national necessity. The expense of its maintenance, always a matter of concern to the Army itself, is almost negligible when we consider it as the basis of our national defense system and our safeguard against internal disturbance. The advantages of having such an organization entirely outweighs the relatively small expense of maintaining it. The excessive cost of our wars, as indicated by a study of the national debt, is directly chargeable to unpreparedness. The small annual appropriation for the support of the army is an insurance against the probability of war and the further increase of debts and pensions.

As an organization, the army has served faithfully and loyally in every crisis through which this nation has passed. Regardless of the scant consideration it has received, it stands today, as always, ready to obey the mandates of the government, whether it be to repel the invader or to enforce the rights of America as a leader among the nations.

"The Car of Balanced Design" say Engineers
"Balanced Value" say Buyers

ECONOMY • DURABILITY
COMFORT • SAFETY
PERFORMANCE • APPEARANCE

Perhaps the sincerest wish of a buyer is that his new car will be durable and dependable. Which is simply another way of saying that he hopes it will be economical.

In the past, he feels, he has sometimes been lucky, sometimes unlucky.

What can he do to be sure, in advance, that his car will stay new long enough to be a good buy for him?

He knows that he can get out of the car only what has been built into it.

So he wants to know what's in it—what his expectations may be.

Now it is reasonable, isn't it, to say that because Pontiac is the car of Balanced Design it gives the owner Balanced Value? The latter is really a necessary consequence of the former.

And what does that mean? It means simply that Pontiac's moving parts are so carefully balanced, the stresses and strains so well equalized, that the various parts grow old very slowly—and evenly.

That is balanced economy, is it not—true economy?

The 4-Door Sedan, $695, f. o. b. Pontiac. Special equipment extra

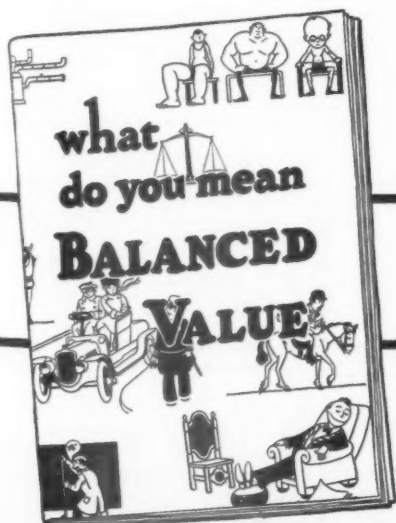

At average driving speeds, for example, Pontiac's Straight Eight 77-horsepower engine is really "taking it easy."

That is why owners say Pontiac gives 15 or more miles to the gallon of gas. That is also economy, is it not?

But that isn't all. Because it has no overstrained parts, and because it grows old evenly as a whole, Pontiac gives you thousands of miles of expense-free use. And then, at the end of two or three years it gives you extra dividends in the way of higher trade-in value.

All closed models have Fisher Bodies—and Fisher No Draft Ventilation.

Maybe you are tired of the car you now own or maybe you are disappointed in it. Then why not look into Pontiac? Dealers are everywhere. Any one of them will gladly let you drive a new Pontiac so that you can see for yourself how well it behaves. Be sure, too, to read the booklet, "What do you mean—Balanced Value." It is written for human beings. Easy to read—and at the same time gives facts that you will be glad to have as a basis for buying a car. The booklet is free.

Club Bankrupt

Federal Judge Alfred C. Coxe, of New York City, has appointed the Irving Trust Company to act as receiver for the Army and Navy Club, of 30 West 44th street, New York City. The Judge acted on a petition in bankruptcy signed by Capt. W. C. Goslar, secretary and treasurer of the club. The action was authorized by the club's board of governors on May 29.

Among the creditors listed were: Governor Herbert H. Lehman, Maj. Gen. James G. Harbord, Admiral Montgomery M. Taylor, Brig. Gen. William O. H. Dodds, Lt. Col. James A. Goodin, Frank A. Grant and Allen Kimberly; Majors R. Penfield, William H. Hammanond, Edwin Gould and J. H. Hahn and Lt. Comdr. George L. Russell.

"Established in obedience to an insistent demand for an official organ for members of the American Defense and those concerned with it, The Army and Navy Journal will be published in the interest of no party; it will be controlled by no clique. Its independence will be absolute. Its interests will be directed solely to the inculcation of sound military ideas and to the elevation of the public service in all its departments.—From Vol. I, No. 1, of The Army and Navy Journal, published August 29, 1863.

SATURDAY, JUNE 3, 1933

"Never have I been so convinced, as during my residence abroad, of the wisdom of the maxim of the Father of his country, that the best mode of preserving peace is to be prepared for war."—JAMES BUCHANAN.

ACROSS THE BLACK CLOUDS WHICH HAVE hung threateningly over the Army, the Navy and the Marine Corps has appeared a rainbow. That arc of colors represents the decision finally reached by the Administration that there are to be no cuts in the personnel of the Army nor, probably, the Navy and Marine Corps. To the officers and men who have been plunged into uncertainty, who have been racking their brains as to what they should do in case furloughed or discharged, this relief is of vital personal importance. It means that their livelihood will not be taken away from them, that the careers upon which they embarked will continue to be those they can pursue, and that they will not have to abandon the professions which are sources of love and satisfaction to them. It means the restoration of faith in Government, the conviction that although there may be men temporarily in office seeking to use economy for political advantage, the people who control the Federal authority can be relied upon to prevent the adoption of policies not only unjust to those who wear the uniform but destructive to the defense of the country. As our readers know, we have had faith that an informed people would halt peremptorily any serious hamstringing of our protection. To all who responded to the appeals addressed to them to communicate their protests to the President and his advisers we express the sincere and appreciative gratitude of the Army, the Navy and the Marine Corps. The Press, the patriotic organizations, the clubs, the individuals—to each and every one of them the ARMY AND NAVY JOURNAL, on behalf of the Services, extends its devoted thanks. A crisis, the most serious in years, has been passed. Aware of the confidence of the country in them, the Services now can be depended upon to regain that high morale which was enjoyed before the President and the Director of the Budget ordered the slashes that meant the destruction of National Defense.

BUT WHILE THE PERSONNEL HAS BEEN saved, the Roosevelt Administration is continuing to demand cuts in expenditures which will greatly embarrass the Services in the matter of training and equipment. Such cuts will be accepted—there is no other alternative. They mean nothing to the comfort of officers and men; such of it as they enjoyed was taken from them in the first years of the depression. But it seems to us that the American people having decided that the personnel of the Services shall remain at the present figures, will insist that adequate provision of the tools necessary for efficiency shall be made. This means that there should be no interruption of National Guard training, no cessation of the Reserve Officer and Citizens Training Camps, continuance of the manoeuvres for the Naval Reserves, and supply of the mechanical equipment so important for the proper functioning of all Arms. The country will not forget that the Administration in its anxiety to make the C.C.C. operation a success has drawn officers and men from the Army, the Navy and the Marine Corps, and that their detachment from regular duties has imposed additional work upon the officers and men remaining with their commands. It will be possible to perform the two distinct missions—the Services do not fail to execute their orders; but it is clear that in order to do so effectively adequate means must be furnished. Therefore, we urge upon the President and the Director of the Budget reconsideration also of the slashes in connection with training and material which were originally ordered and the grant of sums which will enable the Services to perform efficiently the tasks placed in their hands.

GENERAL PERSHING, IN HIS MEMORIAL Day address, radioed under the auspices of the American Legion, expressed views on our National Defense situation which justly have received the careful attention of his countrymen. Concerned over the treatment of the veterans disabled by service during the war, he truly declared that the nation would resent neglect of these valiant men. But having paid his respect to the memory of the heroic dead and reiterated his insistence for the care of the war maimed and diseased, he discussed the present and future situation of the United States, and in clear and unmistakable words impressed upon his unseen audience the high importance of adequate land and sea defense. Coming from a patriot whose single thought is his country, from the commander-in-chief of the most formidable armies ever led to victory under the American Flag, and from a man who demonstrated in the trying days in France the possession of high qualities of statecraft, there can be no doubt of the tremendous influence upon the thought of his fellow citizens which the General wielded. Therefore, when he argued against American disarmament in advance of like action by other nations, when he advocated a Treaty Navy and a National Defense Act Regular Army and components, we may be sure his opinions will receive from the people the consideration they deserve.

WE INVITE THE ATTENTION OF THE ROOSEVELT Board to public opinion upon the proposal to amalgamate the Marine Corps with the Navy. That opinion should not be disregarded. It is solid and urgent. We have been reviewing the press of the country, and we have found an unanimous expression of the editorial view that the Marine Corps should not be abolished, that aside from the effective service it has rendered in war and peace, it represents a tradition that is inextricably bound up with American life and history and is therefore an inspiration to patriotism in the present and future. We could present technical reasons for the continuance of the Marine Corps as a separate identity operating in complete harmony with the bluejacket contingent of the Navy, but to the members of the Board aware of the facts this would be superfluous. We feel safe in saying that only political purpose supported by a desire to make a record for economy and reorganization of the Government, is behind the attempt to abolish this historic body. In the face of the public opinion we describe, we suggest to the politicians interested that they will suffer harm if they persist in their efforts to induce the Board to abolish a Corps that means so much to the Nation and its defense.

Ten Day Soldiers

I read a 'Merican gen'ral,
Service of Supply, says,
Ten days will train a Tommy
To serve 'is King an' die,
Ten days—too much by far—
Five preeceless days too much,
I fought the war in five,
As witness, here's me crutch.

One Monday took the shillin'—
Replacement Royal Scots—
Drew me kit an' kilty,
That day they taught me lots,
Across the Chann'l to Calais,
Under Sir John French,
Got the Star of Mons—
A blighty in a trench.

Back in Lunnon Friday,
A bit o' shrap in me knee,
The Queen an' Princess Mary,
They both called on me,
Ten days? too much by 'alf,—
Here I'm still alive,
Scotty McPherson kens,
For 'e was a 'ero in five.

(Note: Question in the course in Troop Training. "If it takes but ten days to train a soldier, how many can be trained in one year?" Answer: $365 \div 10 = 36.5$. Subnote: 36.6 in leapyears.)

ASK THE JOURNAL

SEND your queries to the ARMY AND NAVY JOURNAL QUESTION EDITOR and an answer will be given in this column as soon as possible after receipt.

M. R.—The Adjutant General's Office informs us that they know of no such order as you mention exempting men above a certain age from drills. Perhaps it was a local regulation. The post adjutant's office should be able to give you full information on the point.

Charles Rosen—The Office of the Chief of Finance informs us that service as a midshipman at the Naval Academy is not counted in computing the longevity pay of an enlisted man in the United States Army.

J. M.—You are number six on the list for promotion to the grade of technical sergeant, QMC, according to information furnished us by the Office of the Quartermaster General, War Department.

F. A.—The Reenlistment bonus is suspended from July 1, 1933 to June 30, 1934. Possible continuation of the suspension after that date depends upon action by Congress. Under the new economy act your pay for one year from April 1, 1933, will be 15 per cent less than what you would otherwise be entitled to. At the present there is no indication that the Air Corps Technical School at Chanute Field, Illinois will be moved. Some months ago, consideration was given to a proposal to move the School to Dayton Field, Ohio, but this was decided against and present plans contemplate no change. Of course, no one can predict what may result from the huge cut ordered in next year's appropriations.

SERVICE NEWS AND GOSSIP

Selection of General Officers—In view of the discussion that arose in Congress relative to the selection of general officers, it is interesting to analyze the group of officers recently selected for elevation.

Of the five colonels selected to be brigadier generals, all have a good length of time to serve on the active list. The youngest, Brig. Gen. David L. Stone, is only 56 years old; Brig. Gen. Alfred T. Smith is 58; while two, Brig. Gen. Francis L. J. Parker and Brig. Gen. Sherwood A. Cheney are 59, and the other, Brig. Gen. T. E. Whitworth is 61. Brig. Gen. George S. Simonds, who was selected to be a major general is 59. All of the new line generals were appointed originally from the United States Military Academy with the exception of General Smith who rose from the enlisted ranks. All of them also, with the exception of General Stone, have been graduated from the Army War College. As to their positions on the relative list of colonels as carried in the January directory we find that General Parker stood No. 20; General Whitworth No. 23; General Smith No. 45; General Cheney No. 48; and General Stone No. 80. General Simonds was the fourth ranking brigadier general at the time of his appointment.

As for the branch chiefs (all of whom were appointed from among their own arm) it is noted that they were of an even younger average age than the line generals. Brig. Gen. A. E. Truby, the new assistant to the Surgeon General, is the oldest, being 61 years old. Brig. Gen. Creed F. Fox, new chief of the bureau of Insular Affairs, is only 55; Maj. Gen. James F. McKinley, the new Adjutant General, is 53 years old; Brig. Gen. Edgar T. Conley, the new assistant Adjutant General, is 59; Maj. Gen. Edward Croft, the new chief of infantry, is 57, and Maj. Gen. Claude E. Brigham, the new chief of the Chemical Warfare service, is 55 years old. Three of the new chieftains, Generals Cox, Conley and Brigham, were originally appointed from the United States Military Academy. General Truby was appointed to the Army shortly after his graduation as a physician from the University of Pennsylvania. General McKinley started his career as an enlisted man in the Spanish War, while General Croft originally was appointed from civil life. Generals Cox, Conley and Croft are graduates of the Army War College. As to their position on the list, General Truby was No. 7 on the list of colonels of the medical department; General Cox was No. 400 on the relative list of colonels, and No. 38 on the list of colonels of Field Artillery; General McKinley is No. 124 on the list of Colonels and No. 8 on the list of colonels of the Adjutant General's Department; General Conley is No. 60 on the list of colonels and No. 3 on the list of colonels of the Adjutant General's Department; General Croft is No. 106 on the list of colonels and No. 37 on the list of colonels of infantry; and General Brigham is No. 414 on the list of colonels and No. 2 on the list of colonels of the Chemical Warfare service.

Army Paper Work—In the interest of reduction of paper work and upon recommendation of the Commanding General, Second Corps Area, and the Assistant Chief of Staff, G-4, the Chief of Staff has rescinded the instructions in letter of The Adjutant General dated Feb. 20, 1929, requiring reports, as of June 30 of each year, of progress of inventories from all posts, camps and stations. The elimination of the reports will not alter in any respect the responsibility of post commanders or property officers for the security of or accounting for public property. The inventory required by AR 35-6520 will be made annually at such times as may be determined by local commanding officers. Corps Area and other inspectors will investigate and report whether annual inventories are being made as required by the regulations.

The Chief of Staff has also approved the recommendation of The Adjutant General and the Chief of Finance that the number of signatures required on shipping tickets relating to interbranch procurements be reduced from five to two. The two signatures now required are (a) that of the receiving officer on the shipping ticket for file as a credit voucher to the stock record accountability of the shipping officer and (b) that of the receiving officer on the shipping ticket to be furnished to the General Accounting Office. Approximately 15,000 signatures annually on shipping tickets will be dispensed with. Appropriate changes are now being made in AR 35-860, AR 35-880 and 35-6600.

Air Secretaryship "Forgotten"—Appointment of assistant secretaries for air of the War and Navy Departments are being held in abeyance pending the publication of details of the administration's reorganization plan. Asked about the appointment for the War Department, Secretary Dern this week said, "Well, we have just forgotten it. I think that's in the reorganization scheme. They are talking about abolishing that position but of course that hasn't been done yet and I think it is just being held in abeyance."

He explained that should it be definitely determined to abolish the post, that the Air affairs will be administered by the Chief of the Air Corps the same as other branch chiefs administer the affairs of their arms.

Army Appointments on Merit—Secretary of War Dern at his conference with newspapermen Thursday took occasion to express gratification on the confirmation of Maj. Gen. James F. McKinley as The Adjutant General.

"General McKinley," he said, "was appointed yesterday. I am very happy to see that and want to say that all the appointments that I recommended have been purely on the basis of merit and that's going to be the policy of the Department while I am here—that merit is the only thing that counts, and that an officer who tries to bring influence of any kind or personal friendship to bear, is going to do himself more harm than good."

Flight Pay—As forecast in the ARMY AND NAVY JOURNAL last week the Senate this week amended the flight pay restriction in the Independent Office Bill to fix the maximum of such pay at "the maximum prescribed for a lieutenant colonel in the Army." As now carried in the Senate bill, the proviso reads:

"Sec. 9. That under the provisions of section 20 of the act approved June 10, 1922, as amended (U.S.C., title 37, sec. 20), no additional compensation shall be allowable or paid to any person in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps, or Army Reserve Corps, or National Guard, or the Naval Reserve, or Marine Corps Reserve, or the Coast Guard, in consequence of such statute as amended at a rate per annum in excess of the maximum prescribed for a lieutenant colonel in the Army."

Praises Army Sergeant—Too often the work of the Army non-commissioned officers goes unnoticed by the public. The following letter received by Lt. Col. John E. Mort, of Ft. Hayes, Columbus, Ohio, speaks for itself:

Dear Sir:—

I am a member of the English faculty of Arsenal Technical High School, Indianapolis, Ind. This year my youngest brother, Lee Worth Brown, is in the military unit. This child is the pride of my heart, as he was my father's, who was killed in an automobile accident a year ago. In every way I am trying to bring good influences to this brother to make up for his loss. So in that way, this year I have come into close contact with the R. O. T. C. unit.

Believing that there is altogether too little praise expressed in this world, I am taking this opportunity of presenting to you the outstanding characteristics of Sergeant Chester A. Pruett who is instructor of the R. O. T. C. unit at Arsenal Technical High School. My commendations have to deal with his far-reaching influence and inspiration. To me it is remarkable that one man who daily instructs 561 young Americans in military tactics could be so patient and so interested that he not only readily knows each individual by name, but also is acquainted with facts concerning each boy's home life and activities. Sergeant Pruett's interest in his boys is so keen that he visits homes where there is illness, accident, death, or misfortune. Many of his boys have been without homes, clothing, and food, but through his vigilance they have been provided for.

His own home is the social center for his boys. Scarcely an evening passes unless two or three boys stop to discuss their plans with him. Many parents, too, fathers especially, request Sergeant Pruett to explain life problems to their sons when they themselves hesitate. Mrs. Pruett, also, is enthusiastic about the boys. At the beginning of each term, she alters and fits many uniforms, collars, sleeves, backs, etc.

The boys in turn show their esteem for Sergeant Pruett. Just recently he moved. With the arrival of the van, unsolicited four of his boys arrived, and worked right with the Sergeant all day placing furniture, fitting gas pipes, washing windows, etc.

Our faculty as a whole marvels at the influence Sergeant Pruett has on the boys. It breaks a lad's heart to feel that any misdeed would be reported to him; and it's amazing how some of our worst boys will snap into best form for this instructor.

Sergeant Pruett is a most humble man. He never attributes any praise or credit to himself. It's always "the boys did it." I have never known him to become so impatient that he ever raised his voice—he always has command of himself and is always gentle. In spite of the fact that he was recuperating from a serious operation at Walter Reed Hospital last summer, he alone trained our 561 boys who were on the field April 27th, the day of inspection—yet none has ever heard him complain about his physical condition or about his task.

Although he is not a highly educated man, yet he has an open mind—he is always eager for the correct pronunciation of words and their uses. He is intensely interested in the academic activities of our institution.

All the boys have absolute love and respect for Sergeant Pruett, and I am happy to say that my brother is included. I'm proud to know that each day he comes into contact with such a clean, wholesome, understanding man.

Very truly yours,
(signed) Alice Brown

Investigate Akron Crash—Col. Charles A. Lindbergh, testifying this week before the joint Congressional Committee investigating the Akron disaster, said that "to stop development of lighter-than-air craft would be a great mistake."

Asked for his opinion as to the cause of the Akron crash Colonel Lindbergh criticized the policy of requiring Naval officers to be detached from aviation duty for duty on surface vessels. "My personal opinion," he declared, "is that it has been and is a mistake to discourage specialization in the service."

Among the other witnesses appearing before the committee were Col. J. M. Patterson, publisher of the New York Daily News; a World War Veteran; Brig. Gen. William Mitchell; Cleveland Rodgers, editor of the Brooklyn Daily Eagle; and Harry N. Guggenheim. Colonel Patterson, Rodgers and Emile Gauvreau, managing editor of the New York Mirror, all opposed further venture of the United States into the lighter-than-air field.

This Week—

retary of the Treasury. Too bad that Mr. Douglas will leave us. No news yet as to his successor. I hope it will be a man of wide experience and vision who will oppose cheese paring in connection with National Defense.

The new Director of the Budget should look into the question of service pay. Young married lieutenants ordered to CC camps are particularly hard hit. They are being forced into debt in order to meet essential obligations. Mr. President, Mr. Douglas, Mr. McSwain and Senator Sheppard, please take notice.

The Senate will pass the Industrial control-public works bill during the next few days. Under that bill provision will be made for new naval construction and for construction and other needs of the Army. Thus permanent improvements will be made in order to help emergency employment. It is a good policy.

There is a toilet kit scandal in connection with the C.C.C. The Senate Military Affairs Committee is investigating it. Major General Dewitt, Quartermaster General, testified that he insisted that the kits furnished to the Army were those which should be distributed among the conservationists. These cost 42 cents each. The Director of the C.C.C. testified that under orders from Secretary to the President Howe he signed a contract for the kits which cost $1.40 each, this without advertising or call for bids. Director of the Budget Douglas is understood to have played a part in the negotiations. It will be a matter of satisfaction to the Army to know that the stand of the War Department was in accordance with the honorable policy it has always pursued. But that was to have been expected from an officer of the integrity of General DeWitt.

I note that Judge Harold Taylor, of Chicago, has sentenced two boys to service in the C.C.C. following their conviction for petit larceny. The Army, Navy, and Marine Corps, after many years of fighting, has finally convinced the judges that this practice is useless as far as their services are concerned. They simply will not accept enlistments from such men. I wonder if those charged with accepting enrollments for the C.C.C. will follow this practice, if they will force the high type of men that compose our Army to play wet nurse to convicted thieves.

Graduates Receive Year's Pay

Graduates of the Naval Academy for whom there were no vacancies in the Navy received the one year's sea pay upon discharge this week, legislation to cut off this gratuity being still in the congressional mill on graduation day.

Future graduates, however, will be denied this compensation in lieu of commissions, for an agreement was reached between the House and the Senate conferees this week for passage of the bill. The Senate on May 29 passed HR 5012, after accepting an unanimous report of its Committee on Naval Affairs, to allow surplus graduates of this year's class to receive a half year's sea pay. The following day, a similar provision attached as a rider to the Independent Offices appropriation, was approved by the Senate. The House disagreeing to the Senate amendment to HR 5012, the bill was sent to conference between the two houses and an agreement was reached June 1.

Inasmuch as it was too late to make the bill affect the class of 1933, the Senate amendment was dropped and specific provision was made that the bill would not apply to this year's graduates.

Rear Adm. John D. Wainwright, USN, senior member of the Army War College class of 1932-33, attended his last classes at the college on May 20. His departure was made the occasion of a very short but pleasant surprise ceremony in the lecture room.

With the faculty and class assembled in the lecture room the Admiral was conducted to the platform by Col. L. B. Kromer, the Assistant Commandant. The members of his first committee acted as side boys and the Chief boatswains Mate piped the Admiral over the side as the two-starred blue flag of his rank was broken from the main mast.

The president of the class, Lt. Col. C. B. Hodges, opened the ceremonies with brief remarks and Maj. G. W. Graham then presented the Admiral with the flag of his new grade as a slight token of the high regard and deep affection of the class for him. The Admiral expressed his appreciation and raised his listeners to a high pitch of enthusiasm by remarking that he left the War College happy in the knowledge that "his General," George S. Simonds would raise his two star flag first. The Admiral was then piped down and standing at the door of the lecture room bade adieu to each member as the class filed by him.

Admiral Wainwright leaves the War College to take command of the Yangtze River patrol with the USS Luzon as his flagship.

Col. and Mrs. Edward J. Cullen entertained a small party at dinner at their home in Pittsburgh May 27. The guests of honor Gen. and Mrs. Adelbert Cronkite and asked to meet him were Maj. and Mrs. Edward Turner and Dr. and Mrs. Ralph Porter. Colonel Cullen is on duty at the University of Pittsburgh, Pa.

Confirm General McKinley

After having held it up for 11 days, the Senate on May 31 voted to confirm the nomination of Brig. Gen. James F.

McKinley to be The Adjutant General of the Army with the rank of major general. The President was notified at once and the following day General McKinley took the oath of office.

In contrast with expectations, there was no discussion of the merits of the appointment when the vote was taken. Senator Long, who had threatened to make a lengthy speech, did not do so, and Senator Tydings, of Maryland, who was leading the fight against the confirmation was not even present.

The vote was 67 to 5 in favor of confirmation. The five voting in opposition to General McKinley were Senator Fred H. Brown, of New Hampshire; Senator Bennett Champ Clark, of Missouri; Senator William H. King, of Utah; Senator Huey P. Long, of Louisiana; and Senator Park Trammell, of Florida.

At the conclusion of the roll call vote, Senator Bulkeley moved that the President be notified at once, instead of following the usual custom of waiting two days, in order that complications might be avoided through the earlier appointment of Col. Edgar T. Conley as Assistant The Adjutant General, with rank of brigadier general, whose notification had been ordered held up until the disposition of the McKinley nomination. Senator Long objected to this move, but later withdrew his objection "as a courtesy to the Republican party."

J., directly under the Chief of Naval Operations, pending material readiness for flight to the west coast. When ready materially and weather conditions are suitable, not later than October 20, 1933, the Macon will proceed to and base at the Naval Air Station, Sunnyvale, Calif., reporting to and operating under Commander Aircraft, Battle Force.

Orders have been issued to the Naval Air Station, Lakehurst, to reduce activities to minimum required for the Macon during her stay there, and to reduce further to a bare maintenance status after departure of the Macon to the west coast.

Service Pensions

that have appeared in the press had errors which have caused unnecessary anxiety or left pensioners with an erroneous sense of security. The office of the Army Mutual Aid Association has given information as a result of the studies made in that office but even there it is reported that new facts are developing from time to time on account of changing constructions which are being given to the recently enacted provisions.

In general it may be stated that the widows of veterans of the Civil War and Indian wars are not to be disturbed in their present pension allowances.

In the cases of those who are widows of veterans who served 90 days or more in the Spanish-American War or World War or who participated in active operations during the Philippine Insurrection or Boxer Rebellion and died as a result of causes incident to such service pensions are to continue as heretofore at the rate of $30.00 per month. Where widows are drawing pension on account of service by their husbands during the Spanish War, Philippine Insurrection or Boxer Rebellion but where the veteran's death was not due to causes which originated in or were aggravated by service during those wars, the widows' pensions are to be reduced to $15.00 per month, providing they have income of less than $1,000 a year. If the widow has private income of more than $1,000 a year, she will not be entitled to such pension. The children of deceased veterans of the Spanish War, Philippine Insurrection or Boxer Rebellion will be paid through their widowed mothers, $5.00 per month for one child with $3.00 monthly for each additional child. If there are children and no widow, one child may receive $12.00 per month, two children $15.00 per month, three children $20.00 per month with additional allowances for additional children.

To widows of deceased officers or soldiers of the regular establishment in cases where the officer or soldier died from causes incident to the service, the rate of pension is to be $22.00 per month with $8.00 additional if there is one child and $4.00 additional for each additional child. Where there is no widow one child may receive $15.00, no widow but two children $22.00, three children $30.00 and additional amounts for additional children. The dependent mother or father of an officer or soldier who dies as a result of service in the regular establishment may be paid $15.00 for one parent or where there are two parents $11.00 each.

Widows who are employed by the Federal Government cannot draw pension unless the pension is paid on account of service by the veteran prior to 1898.

raiding forces from the sea, by artillery, mines or other means. In other words, these advance bases must be seized and held against the enemy. After capture, such defense could probably be provided by the Fleet itself, but under such arrangement, in order to insure continuous defense, the Fleet would be tied to service at the bases and would be therefore unable to proceed in its major operations against the enemy fleet. In this case the natural relation between the Fleet and the base would be reversed; the Fleet would serve its base, instead of the contrary.

Therefore, in order to release the Fleet for active operations in pursuit of its objective; namely, establishing contact with the enemy fleet and defeating it in battle, preparation must be made for the defense of the base by its own self-contained forces. This defense may be furnished by submarines and small vessels from attack by sea and also by batteries located at advantageous points on the shore, by mines laid in channels, by airplanes, and by provision made for the firing of torpedoes from the shore. For attack from the land side, defensive works would be constructed and a mobile force maintained for active operations in the field. With these dispositions the Fleet could proceed with its major operations with a reasonable certainty that its base of supplies would remain safe from attack and damage or destruction by the enemy. The commander-in-chief would be relieved of the fear of finding his vessels without the proper supplies or without the proper means for repair and refitting.

In order to seize the ports selected for advance bases the necessary assaulting forces must be available. The artillery preparation for the assault on the land works would probably be furnished by the vessels of the Fleet itself. The batteries of the ships, however, are axiomatically unable to reduce shore batteries which are skillfully defended, and even in case of reduction of such batteries by artillery fire, the vessels themselves would be incapable of occupying

Financial Digest

The daily average volume of Federal reserve bank credit outstanding during the week ending May 24, as reported by the Federal reserve banks, was $2,243,000,000, a decrease of $43,000,000 compared with the preceding week and an increase of $238,000,000 compared with the corresponding week of 1932.

On May 24 total reserve bank credit amounted to $2,219,000,000, a decrease of $35,000,000 for the week. This decrease corresponds with decreases of $57,000,000 in money in circulation and $15,000,000 in unexpended capital funds, nonmember deposits, etc., and an increase of $40,000,000 in Treasury currency, adjusted, off-set in part by an increase of $80,000,000 in member bank reserve balances.

Bills discounted decreased $8,000,000 at the Federal Reserve Bank of New York, $5,000,000 at Cleveland and $18,000,000 at all Federal reserve banks. The System's holdings of bills bought in open market declined $35,000,000 and of Treasury certificates and bills $20,000,000, while holdings of United States bonds increased $10,000,000 and of United States Treasury notes $35,000,000.

the shore positions and of defending them against attack by land forces of the enemy. Therefore, in order to seize and hold the selected advance bases, it is necessary that the Fleet be provided with a capable force for the purposes of assault and of further operations on shore, including the cleaning up of adjacent nests of the enemy which might be used to harass our own forces.

It is obvious that the force provided for this purpose must be well trained in all the branches of land and seacoast warfare, which includes the locating and establishment of batteries, the location and construction of trenches and other works for defense against land attack, the planting of mine fields in the locations most advantageous for obstruction of the direction of the enemy's vessels, the establishment of defending batteries for these mine fields, the installation of signalling and searchlight systems, and the maintenance of offensive and defensive air forces. This competent military force would be in addition to the technical and mechanical force required for the maintenance and operation of the repair shops within the limits of the base and of the handling and issue of fuel, ammunition, stores and other supplies accumulated there for the sustenance of the vessels of the Fleet.

Experience has shown that the Marine Corps, a specialized force, separated from the Navy yet under its direction, is the best means which can be devised for this function.

Admiral Leahy Appointed

Rear Adm. William D. Leahy, USN, was nominated this week to be Chief of the Bureau of Navigation for a term of four years beginning July 1, 1933. Since May 6, 1933, when relieved as commander of Destroyers, U. S. Fleet, Admiral Leahy has been on duty in the Navy Department as senior service member of the Roosevelt Reorganization Board.

Admiral Leahy was born in Hampton, Iowa, May 6, 1875, and was appointed to the Naval Academy in 1893 from Wisconsin. During the Spanish-American War, he served in the USS Oregon. In 1917, he was ordered to the USS Nevada as Executive Officer, and in April 1918, was given command of the USS Princess Matoka, engaged in transporting and escorting troops and supplies through the War Zone. For that service he was awarded the Navy Cross.

From June, 1918, until February, 1921, he served as Director of Gunnery Exercises and Engineering Performances, Navy Department. He commanded the USS St. Louis, flagship of Commander, U. S. Naval Force in Turkish Waters in 1921, and subsequently commanded Mine Squadron One, Atlantic Fleet. In 1922, he became Commander of the Control

Force and in 1923, was ordered to the Bureau of Navigation, Navy Department, for duty, and served as Director of Officer Personnel. He commanded the USS New Mexico in June, 1926, and in October, 1927, was appointed as Chief of the Bureau of Ordnance, Navy Department, with the rank of Rear Admiral. He was detached from that duty and given command of Destroyers, Scouting Force, in June, 1931.

Army Schools

It is understood that, should the C.C.C. continue unabated there will be a drastic curtailment of the service school system next Fall. An effort will be made to have them carry on with about half the usual quota of students, but whether even this will be possible depends on the amount of additional duty the Army will have to carry.

defense against aggression. I am not going to dilate on the duties and responsibilities that fall upon you in war and in peace. These things you have learned from your own studies and from your instructors who have participated in them. You should, and I assume you do, know more about them than I can know and are fully appreciative of their importance and the grave consequences with which the manner of your performance of these duties is involved.

Knowledge of these things I must assume you have learned in the course of your term at the Academy. Otherwise you would not be here awaiting the diplomas which certify your fitness to be Naval officers of the United States.

You have an advantage over many other young men, not alone in having survived the tests requisite to your receiving your diplomas, but especially in that you have learned discipline, responsibility, industry and loyalty—the very elements upon which, in every walk of life, every worthwhile success is founded. Others on the threshold of active life must demonstrate their reliability; yours, because you have graduated from the United States Naval Academy, is taken for granted.

There are, however, other lessons which cannot be taught in the classrooms of the service colleges or of civilian colleges—lessons which can come only through voluntary study and voluntary practice on your part after you have graduated. These are lessons that have to do with your relationship to your fellow man in your contacts with your associates in your chosen profession of government service or of private endeavor.

A columnist complained the other day that I had overestimated the importance of understanding of, and sympathy with, the point of view and the general well-being of what might be called the average citizen, and he intimated that a man could be highly successful in any profession without studying that point of view.

Nevertheless, when you make a close examination of any profession, you will find very few successful men, or for that matter women, who do not take into consideration the effect of their individual efforts on humanity as a whole.

Esprit de corps, pride of profession, is as delightful and imperative an element in the making of a good officer as it is in the making of a good professional or business man, but when it is carried to the point of assuming that only the holder of an Annapolis commission or diploma, or the possessor of a college degree, is a valid member of the aristocracy of life, it becomes a hindrance instead of a help to your service, to the government and to your fellow citizens.

So I ask you to avoid an exclusive relationship to your own clan—to your clan of the Navy or to some other special government service or to the clan of your profession in civil life. Remember to cultivate the friendship of people, not alone in your own class or profession—but the average run of folks—the same folks you would have known and liked and affiliated with had you not been chosen to enter and to graduate from a highly specialized institution of higher education.

This I ask of you, not only for your own sakes, but for your country's sake. You who become today Officers of the United States Navy are not set apart as a clique with different interests and different ideas from those of the rest of the country. Those of you who are to enter civil life are, in the same way, in no sense a clique.

You have, and should rightly have, pride in graduation from our splendid, historical Naval Academy. You inherit the tradition of honor and of efficiency. You inherit as well the tradition of service to the people of the United States. You will, I am confident, think of those people not as an abstract, theoretical mass, but as one hundred and twenty millions of men and women and children in forty-eight States—on sea coast, on plain and among the mountains; in city, in village and on farm; rich people, people of moderate means, poor people; people employed and people out of jobs. You represent them all. They have given you a glorious opportunity. Make good. Keep the faith. Good luck to you in the days to come!

Navy Notes

Comdr. Charles Alan Pownall, USN, and Lt. Comdr. Arthur C. Commander Pownall, now on duty in the Bureau of Aeronautics, will be the executive officer of the Ranger, while Commander Davis, now on duty in the Office of Chief of Naval Operations, will be head of the Air Department of the vessel.

The Secretary of the Navy has sent a letter of commendation to Lt. Comdr. Joel J. White, MC, USN, for his development of an instrument for the analysis of air in the cockpits and cabins of airplanes to determine the carbon monoxide concentration. Lt. He has orders to duty on the Staff of Commander Aircraft, Base Force.

Mr. Neagle Retires

Mr. Pickens Neagle, Head Attorney of the Office of the Judge Advocate General of the Navy, was retired from the service on May 31, after having been continuously employed in the Navy Department since Oct. 7, 1887. Mr. Neagle was presented a gold watch and a radio set by the officers and civilian personnel of the Judge Advocate General's Office, and a commendatory letter from the Secretary of the Navy.

Congressional Activities

The following report of the activities of the Retired Officers Association during the 2nd session of the 72nd Congress has been made:

"1. Our President was in Washington during the months of January and February, for the purpose of protecting the interests of retired officers when various pieces of legislation, detrimental to them, were being considered in the Halls of Congress.

"2. His first efforts were directed toward helping to block the recommendation of the Senate Economy Committee for a further reduction in the pay of all Federal employees. There were many powerful organizations, such as the American Federation of Labor, National Federation of Federal Employees, and others, which were working along the same line, we being one of the important cogs in the wheel. He contacted the heads of all these organizations and arranged to coordinate his efforts along with theirs, and the defeat of the further cut in pay was accomplished by the very narrow vote of 45 to 39.

"3. When it came to matters pertaining solely to SERVICE legislation, the help of most of these powerful allies could not be obtained as the legislation did not directly affect their membership. It was only through the coordinated efforts of the War Department, Navy Department, R. O. T. C., and the Retired Officers Association that the defeat of the following Bills and Amendments to the Army Appropriation Bill was effected:

"The McClintic (Okla.) Bill: This Bill proposed to do away with all retired pay until a fund had been created of such size that the interest therefrom would be sufficient to take care of all retired pay, which fund was to be secured by taxing all active and retired officers 3 1/2% of their yearly pay. It would require a great many years to acquire such a fund.

"The Johnson (Okla.) Bill: This Bill would limit retired pay to 50% of active duty pay and allowances. Such a scale of pay, we are advised, is in effect in the British Navy, which would be cited by Mr. Johnson when his measure was being discussed when again introduced. The passage of such a measure would greatly reduce our present rate of pay.

"The Connery (Mass.) Amendment provided that 'no part of the appropriation would be used to pay any officer who had an income of $3,000. Such an amendment would seriously affect a vast number of retired officers.

"The Connally (Texas) Amendment provided that no officer whose earned income amounted to $10,000 or over would be entitled to any retired pay. Both of the last two amendments are wrong in principle, for retired pay should be considered as inviolable and not subject to any reduction no matter what one's income might amount to.

"The Taber (N. Y.) Amendment: This would have prevented all officers counting, for pay purposes, any service other than commissioned while in actual service of the Government.

"4. The defeat of these five measures rested entirely upon the War and Navy Departments, the R. O. T. C., and the Retired Officers Association. We assure you that the blocking of these measures was no simple matter, and only through our combined efforts were we successful in the accomplishment of our objective.

"5. We have no doubt but that some of these vicious Bills and Amendments will be again introduced during the 73rd Congress and that we will have a hard fight for our very existence.

"6. We brought to the attention of the President and the Director of the Budget the fact that while all the branches of the employees of the Federal Government have received large increases in pay during the past 16 years, our increase has amounted to only 11%, and that to reduce our pay in the same proportion as that of other Government employees would not seem equitable or just.

"7. Before the convening of the first regular session of the 73rd Congress it is our intention to carry on a campaign of education, presenting to the public as well as to Senators and Congressmen, by correspondence and through the Press, the time honored custom of considering as inviolable our retired pay, which has been fully earned and paid for. Any success which we may obtain along these lines will depend upon the cooperation of retired officers.

"8. The recognition by both the War and Navy Departments, as well as that of the Coast Guard, of the assistance this organization can render in opposing unfavorable legislation is of far reaching effect. Lt. Col. Phillipson, head of the Legislative Branch, G. S. C., has announced that from now on his office has 'tied in' our organization with his and that thereby we will be able to coordinate our efforts. The Navy Department has also recognized our association as an important factor in rendering assistance in defeating legislation detrimental to the services, and is giving us their hearty and moral support.

"9. Both the War and Navy Departments are much perturbed as to what Congress may do to the Services during the next regular session, and our association must be prepared to meet the situation.

"10. The work accomplished by this association, during the second session of the 72nd Congress, has more than proven its worth, and all retired officers who have not yet joined our association should appreciate the advisability of doing so promptly.

"11. The Publisher of the ARMY AND NAVY JOURNAL has generously granted our association space each month in his publication for the dissemination of news which will be of special interest to retired officers.

"12. We believe that we have merited your commendation. We assure you that we will continue to protect your interests in the future as we have done in the past. We realize that other organizations are asking you to contribute to their overhead expenses but we desire that you remember that ours is the only one composed exclusively of commissioned and warrant officers of the regular Army, Navy, Marine Corps and Coast Guard. It is to your interest to belong to it."

SPICY leaves of
are strung to dry and cure in the sun.

Well, that's something about cigarettes I never knew before the cigarette that's Milder •

the cigarette that TASTES BETTER

I'd never thought much about what's inside a Chesterfield cigarette. But I have just been reading something that made me think about it.

Just think of this, some of the tobacco in Chesterfield—the Turkish—comes from 4000 miles away! And before it is shipped every single leaf is packed by hand.

Of course I don't know much about making cigarettes, but I do know this—that Chesterfields are milder and have a very pleasing aroma and taste. They satisfy—and that's what counts!
